The Actress Looks On Her Dead Counterpart and Faints.

THE SIGHT TOO MUCH FOR HER.

The Dead and the Living Look so Much Alike that While Dolly was in a Swoon She Could not be Told from the Suicide--- Even their Clothing was Similar-Tarrytown's Mys-

New York, June 25 .- Mystery surrounds the death of the fair girl who was fished out of the Hudson River at Croton Landing.

No one has claimed her body. Only one person, a private detective, has even sought to identify her.

She lay at Undertaker Vanderbilt's in Tarrytown in a casket covered with flowers sent by sympathetic villagers, among them Miss Berkeley, principal of the Berkeley Seminary.

It was not until .liss Dollie Davis, the actress, jumped from the train at Tarrytown that the inhabitants of the town would believe that it was not she who lay in the coffin. Now they realize they have a mystery in town, and Coro-ner Sutton is awakening to the fact that the mystery has got a three days' start on him.

the mystery has got a three days' start on him.

Miss Dayis arrived in this city from Coney Island. She at once went to the office of her agents, Randall & Dickson, at No. 1145 Broadway. Before she reached the office she was joined by several of her friends, and she talked to them in the highest of spirits. She was neatly clad in a purple dress of precisely the same shade as that worn by the suicide. Upon her arrival at the office she immediately closed her engagement for the tour next season of a "Castles in the Air" company. After some other business had been transacted her friends suggested that she go to Tarrytown, and not only view the body, but ease the minds of her acquaintances who still believed she was dead.

At this time Miss Dayis weakened,

At this time Miss Davis weakened, At this time Miss Davis weakened, saying she did not want any more notoriety. She finally became reconciled, and, accompanied by Professor William Blakeney and Thomas Butler, she departed on the 10:30 train. A telegram had been sent to Coroner Sutton notifying him of the coming of Miss Davis. The news spread rapidly, and long before the train was due the station was crowded with people. There were not many people on the train, and almost the first ones to alight were Miss Davis and her friends. As she reached the platform there was a craning of necks and a suppressed cheer. Miss Davis smiled at the greeting and ran nimbly to a waiting carriage. She was driven and a suppressed cheer. Miss Davis smiled at the greeting and ran nimbly to a waiting carriage. She was driven at once to the undertaker's on Main street. The body lay in an ice box, draped in heavy black cloth, in the upper end of the room, and for a few minutes Miss Davis asked a few commonplace questions concerning the dead girl. She seemed nervous, and acted as if she wanted to put the inspection off as iong as possible. Finally she seemed to regain control of her nerves, and walked toward the bier, accompanied by those present. As her gaze met the upturned white face beneath the glass plate, she shivered and said: "The poor girl. I'm so sorry."

Then she looked again at the face; this time longer. Suddenly she recled, and throwing her arms wildly about, exclaimed: "Take me away!"

The senseless girl was carried upstairs into Mrs. Vanderbilt's apartments. As she lay there on the bed with that peculiar deathlike whiteness on her

The senseless girl was carried upstairs into Mrs. Vanderbilt's apartments. As she lay there on the bed with that peculiar deathlike whiteness on her face, and her eyes closed, the resemblance between the two was more than startling, and had the dead girl that moment been placed beside her, it would have been impossible to distinguish them.

"The poor, poor girl! I am so sorry," were the first words she uttered when she regained consciousness. Shortly after Miss Davis had finished luncheon she submitted to an interview.

"In the first place," said she, "since the 'Ship Ahoy' company disbanded I have been living quietly at Coney Island. Although the identity of the poor girl is still unknown, there can be no mistake about the letters. Some people have stated in interviews that they received letters from Dollie Davis, postoffice address Coney Island, asking for assistance. Now, I never sent any such letters, and I have found that there is no other Dollie Davis stopping on the island. The statement about those letters is absolutely untrue."

During the afternoon the body was photographed, and copies of the likeness will be furnished to every official in the State. Chief of Police Rossiter has already begun to make inquiries throughout the adjacent towns.

As the news sproad that the dead girl was not Dollie Davis, many people who had not yet seen the body viewed it, boping to identify it. Until late last night there was a steady stream of callers, but not one could say mere than that she looked very much like Dollie Davis.

During the afternoon many bouquets and boxes of flowers were sent to the pulletidor's and Mrs. Vanlachill.

Struck a Blackberry Country.

Morganions New Dominion.

"Speaking of blackberries," said a good story teller the other day, "reminded me that our friend Joe Moreland will have an opportunity to fill his empty cans and tubs and extra barreis and also himself to the depth of six feet two at about a discount. two, at about a ff-penny bit a gallon, this season. You've heard about Joe's fondness for the blackberry, haven't you? Well," said he, "when Joe first moved to Morgantown some fellow fresh you? Well," said he, "when Joe first moved to Morgantown some fellow fresh from the mountain knocked at his door with a bark basket full of blackberries, which he offered at "a Levy' a gallon. Joe looked him over and thought he was either a joker or a fool. He did not want to be made the vietim of a joke, and he did not want to take advantage of a fool—so he did not buy. But he told his wife about it, and they became interested in blackberries. When the next berry peddler hove in sight Joe was again offered blackberries at 'a levy' a gallon. Then he became excited. He ordered his wife to empty all the vessels about the house and the blackberry peddlers were turned in one continuous procession into Joe's back gate for the next two days until all the empty space about the house was filled with blackberries. Then Joe sat down to congratulate himself that he had taken advantage of the market and laid in a store of lucious fruit that would enable him to live in luxury at a nominal cost for two or three years to come. But the blackberries continued to come, and when

DEATH VALLEY EXPLORERS.

They Complete Their Researches in the Famous Depression.

A dispatch from Keeler, Cal., says that Dr. C. H. Merriam, the ornitholo gist of the expedition which has been exploring the famous Death Valley, has arrived in that town with rare collections of mammals discovered in the valtions of mammals discovered in the val-ley, among which are thirty specimens of a very rare mouse, only one perfect specimen of which has heretofore been known to specialists. The expedition has now left the Death Valley, having completed its researches there. The party entered the valley with two wagons and a number of mules and burros, and carried a supply of water, expecting also to find other water sup-plies in the valley. The wagons were expecting also to find other water supplies in the valley. The wagons were used to haul provisions and grain, and to serve as bases of supplies while the party was in the valley.

The chief purpose of this exploration was to make a thorough biological study of the valley, and it was not the intention of Dr. Merriam to leave that region until specimens of every species of animal and vegetable life procurable had been obtained. Judging from the small items of information that have been published, it may be inferred that its efforts to make a study of the animal and vegetable life of this region have been success.

Death Valley is only about 18 miles wide and 100 miles long, and can be readily entered only at the southern end. It is the lowest of the valleys of the region, being one or the two or three districts in North America which lie below the lovel of the sea. It was famous long tricts in North America which lie-below the level of the sea. It was famous long ago partly from the disastrous results attending explorations of its area and partly from the rumors that immense deposits of gold and silver are to be found among its mountains. The recent expedition is the first through effort that has been made to study this region in its various scientific aspects.

Cycling Under Difficulties.

A young 'man from an Obio town passed through here Thursday on a bicycle and attracted considerable attention, owing to the fact that his left hand was wise and the thumb and first was missing and the thumb and first and half of the second fingers of the right hand were also off and he could see out of but one eye; nevertheless he had ridden over four hundred miles on his machine, holding the cross bar, by placing his left arm in a hook attached to it and by the two and a half fingers of his right hand.
